The European Coaching and Mentoring Research project involved a collaboration with over 50 academics and practitioners, and over 100 professional bodies across Europe.

Introduction

This report provides an overview of the Scottish results from The State of Play in European Coaching & Mentoring (2017) research project, and compares these with the results from England, Wales and Europe (excluding the UK).

Research method

The aim of the research project was to extend beyond traditional institutional networks and the main European languages (English, French, German and Spanish), to provide a more inclusive research study, recognising the equal value of all European countries, languages and cultures, and of the different professional bodies and institutions.

The research questions were designed by the researchers in collaboration with the EMCC, and were adapted during the development phase. For each country, a research partner or team was identified and a National Research Lead was consulted on whether the survey should be translated, and which language(s) should be used. The National Research Leads led the translation process, which involved initial translation and an independent review.

The survey was launched on 1 March 2017 in 31 languages, ranging from English, Spanish, Portuguese, French and German, to Catalan and Serbian.

The survey was publicised through established coaching federations and management bodies, as well as online through social media interest groups. In total, approximately 100 organisations committed to sharing the research link with their members or to publishing details of the research on their website.

Participants took, on average, 25 minutes to complete the questionnaire.

The development of coaching in Scotland

Coaching development in Scotland has progressed since the 1980s, becoming a popular HR practice from the early 2000s. Since that date, both the use of coaching and coach training has grown in scale and scope. This is evidenced by the growth in the number of training providers, the length of coach training courses and a growth in the membership of professional coaching bodies.

Since 2006, coaching supervision has become a recognised practice and is encouraged by all of the main professional coaching bodies that operate in the UK: European Mentoring and Coaching Council (EMCC), Association for Coaching (AC), International Coach Federation (ICF), World Association of Business Coaches (WABC) and Association of Professional Coaches and Supervisions (APECS).

In addition to the above there are a number of sizable coaching sub-groups within other bodies such as the British Psychological Society (BPS) and the British Association of Counselling and Psychotherapy (BACP).

Most bodies hold data at a UK-wide level, but the Association for Coaching has specific data for its Scottish membership, with 350 members in summer 2017.

Current hot topics in Scottish coaching practice include:

Leadership coaching – helping managers transition to leadership roles

Behavioural coaching – how managers can build presence, impact and influence

Dealing with change – how managers can become more effective at managing change.

Mentoring too has developed since the 1980s and is generally seen as a non-chargeable activity, and is most often conducted within organisations as part of a wider HR strategy, with more senior employees mentoring junior talent.

As in other countries within the UK there are a wide number of providers of coach and mentoring training. Private providers are generally accredited by one of the professional bodies, including: Institute of Leadership and Management (ILM), Chartered Management Institute (CMI), ICF, AC and EMCC. The main providers include: Edinburgh Coaching Academy (ECA), Taylor Clarke and CFM Consulting. The University of the West of Scotland also offers a course by distance learning and Henley Business School provides a Professional Certificate in Coaching.
